At a Disney shareholder meeting on Thursday, Iger was presented with a petition from one of the fan-franchise's most dedicated followers — a 14-year-old boy from Brentwood, New York, who wrote on Twitter that he "unapologetically ADORES" Disney's latest superhero epic and chose the "Avengers" villain to represent "what I want from my entertainment." The boy, who asked that his name be withheld in the interest of privacy, told Variety earlier this week that he felt compelled to start a Change.org petition calling for a Marvel Cinematic Universe without Thanos. So why did he have such a high opinion of the villain? "I love the character," he said. "And he's not overtly violent." In "Avengers: Infinity War," Thanos' ultimate plan is revealed: to kill half of all life in the universe to make the universe's remaining inhabitants worthy of being the true rulers of the cosmos. The director, Anthony Russo, has told Variety he likes the idea of fans knowing the full
