This article by Stanley et al., 10141.93.24272573 indicates that serotonin plays an essential role in the patterning of the hindbrain and that central serotonergic neurons are generated from epithelial cells which could be neural crest-derived mesenchyme. This paper will be beneficial for an understanding of neural development in general. Many cell types such as neuronal and glial cells have to undergo multistep differentiation processes to achieve mature cell types. The specification of one cell type by another is thought to play an important role in the generation of complex tissues such as the brain. This paper focuses on the developmental process of the serotonergic neurons of the caudal hindbrain and deals with the following issues: How many types of serotonergic neurons are generated during development?
